

How can we achieve better Work-Life Harmony together?

58 Singaporeans from all walks of life came together today to form the Citizens' Panel on this issue that is close to all our hearts.

We look forward to us collectively exploring new ways to strengthen work-life harmony in Singapore, including a more supportive societal and workplace culture.

Singaporeans who are not part of the Panel can continue to share their views and ideas on the topic through the suggestion box at http://heybaby.sg/PlayAPart.

PARTNERING SINGAPOREANS, FOR SINGAPOREANS

58 Singaporeans came together for the first session of the Citizens' Panel on Work-Life Harmony today. It was initially intended to be a Panel of about 50 members, but due to the enthusiastic response from the public, we tried to accommodate more.

Everyone of us as citizens have an equal stake in Singapore. Everyone brings something different to the table. How do we make progress on the issues we care about? How can we shape a better future together? This is the essence of the SG Together movement, working with Singaporeans for Singaporeans. The Citizens' Panel is a relatively new way to foster such partnerships.

One area that Singaporeans care a lot about is families and we can achieve Work-Life Harmony. This is really about social norms — what we say and do that is acceptable to each other. It's an area where joint action by everyone in society is likely to produce better results.

Low Yen Ling, Assoc Prof Muhammad Faishal Ibrahim and I, along with tripartite leaders, had a chance to interact with the Panel members, who come from all walks of life – employers, employees, freelancers, homemakers, retirees. Despite the diverse backgrounds and perspectives, all of us want to make a difference, and collectively find a way forward for work-life harmony in Singapore. - Jo
