Yesterday evening, I joined 60 Singaporeans, and members from the Emerging Stronger Taskforce, to discuss how COVID-19 is transforming our economy. We discussed how to safeguard and strengthen our position in the global economy, and what new opportunities there are for Singapore.

Entrepreneurs shared how they leveraged resources and networks to seize new business opportunities. Executives and professionals shared their thoughts on upskilling, changes in their industries, and Singapore's competitive advantages. Social entrepreneurs shared how, although it was hard work, they redefined their businesses to achieve both economic and social outcomes. Those who worked abroad shared their views on talent mobility and agility, and how Singapore can continue to seize opportunities in unexpected places.

Underscoring our conversations was a sense of hope that we can, and must, secure our own future together.

I thank all participants for your earnest sharing and rich insights. I hope that we can deepen our partnerships, crystallise our ideas into action, and emerge stronger as an economy and country.
